Why Prohibition Was Defeated.

The Government of Ontario expects to collect $7,000,000 per year profits from the sale of liquor. For a province which has been pretending to live up to the negations of a prohibitory law that seems to assume the existence of a pretty comprehensive thirst.

A Question of Responsibility.

Friend Journal is deeply indubited and very much obliged to the Winnipeg Free Press for telling it something to say in support of the contention that the Dominion Government is responsible for the supreme court of Canada being asked to say whether the school clauses in the Alberta Act are valid or not valid.

The point is not very important, aside from a possible desire to manufacture political ammunition for us against the Dominion Government. But the facts may be briefly stated, and they speak for themselves.

The Dominion and Provincial Governments agreed a year ago upon the wording of a bill to effect the transfer of the natural resources to the control of the Provincial administration. The bill received enactment both at Ottawa and at Edmonton.

The measure was introduced into the Legislature, given first and second readings, and the Legislature adjourned to meet a month later, when final reading was to be given; the expectation being that by that time the bill would have passed Parliament. When the Legislature reconvened in May, Premier Brown brought in an amendment which he wanted to take onto the bill.

That amendment either challenged the validity of the school clauses of the Alberta Act or it had no bearing, meaning or relevancy than the Premier or anybody else has yet assigned to it.

Friend Journal and the Free Press between them can conjure up any other meaning into the formula except a challenge of the validity of the Alberta Act, it is up to them to do it.

"Family" Film and Others?

A bill to regulate the operation of theatres, entertainments halls, and cinematograph is before the Legislature. As introduced, the bill proposed to do little more than re-enact the existing Theatre Act, including regulations made thereunder. In committee, amendments were proposed which would impose some restrictions on the board of censors in relation to moving pictures.

One of these stipulates that no film may be advertised as a "family" picture unless it has been so stamped by the censors, and is by them guaranteed to contain only a minimum of matter inappropriate for presentation to children and to inculcate clean and wholesome ideals.

Another amendment would clothe the board with wider powers, and therefore with wider responsibilities, for the supervision of theatre advertising in newspapers and by poster or circular.

The wisdom of these proposed alterations is to be doubted. The existing law on the subject does not seem to have worked badly, and there is no evidence of a popular demand for more stringency in its application, or for more drastic legislation. Should more rigidity in censorship become desirable, there is latitude in the bill, as proposed in the original bill, for that to be exercised.

If the Government is to undertake through the board of censors to say what films are harmless for children, it will thereby relieve parents of a responsibility which properly belongs to the censor, and take that off the censor. The immediate effect would be that parents would take the censors' word for it, and make no personal inquiry as to what their children were being shown on the screen. It is advisable in this day and generation that Government should give parents, not excuse for their carelessness, but a call to look after the moral welfare of their children!

Would this clause operate to secure clean pictures for children at the expense of smutty pictures for grown-ups? If the censors are called upon to say what pictures children are supposed to go to see, while adults they are not supposed to see, will not the tendency be "let everything go" in films which are officially banned to all save adults?

Alberta people do not want dirty pictures, either for their children or for themselves. They prove that by the general passage which goes to the credit of the province.

The censor cannot brand one film as being fit for children without inferentially branding other films as being unfit for children and doubtful fit for grown-ups. That would work a hardship which they do not deserve upon the picture houses.

The censorship of plays, pictures and advertising is a master of judgment, in the last resort. The necessity for that being established, and the existing measure of supervision having worked out fairly well, it would be a mistake to hamper the freedom of the censors by cast iron regulations in the hope that legislation can ever be substituted for the conscientious and conscientious exercise of common sense and good taste.

In a recent reference in these columns to Canadian National branch lines projected in Alberta an error was made in stating that one of these lines is to run from Ashton to Bonnycastle. The terminus of the road is to Bonnyville, not Bonnycastle.

DAUGHTERS of MIDAS

By Chas. Gustin

THIS HAS HAPPENED
CLAY CURTIS voluntary disappears himself and gives a life of luxury to his wife, in the name of the example of his father. It is Clay Curtis, manager and owner of the largest department store in COLFAX. Clay departs from his home again and his mate. He has been an eminent student of music all his life and his ambition is to become a great composer.

With his wife, Clay turns to the poorer section of the city. They live in a room. While wandering there he is arrested by the sound of violin music. "I am here to rent," tucked on the house front. Clay rents the room and makes a hasty decision and raps at the door.

The room is occupied by BILLY WELLS, a straight, boyish little fellow who recognises the inevitable. She works in his father's department store and has a room in the back room on occasions. After rebuking her for the room, Clay asks her to come to the middle of the room. Clay further astounds the girl by asking her to play the violin. She calls her mother and after clay's partial explanation of his actions is taken into the Wells' household at ten dollars a week.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER IV
The next morning the boy first seemed unearthing how to Clay Curtis was a knock on his door, and Bill Wells came in at eight fine and trim.

"Finished with the violin?"
What a relief! Clay Curtis flung the covers wide and leaped out of bed. "It's cold in here," he said, matter with the steam heat? Maybe the radiator was turned off—but then the Wells' house had no furnace, no radiators. A tiny piano stood here, with open iron door showing kindling and paper laid for a fire. Clay Curtis shivered at the sight of the ten-foot square box at a room.

He looked about him; he lost some of the fine courage that had gone with the arrival of his father's luxurious house. His muscles were cramped from his effort to do without. He was uncomfortable in the short, narrow, hard-surfaced room. He shivered, breathing blue with cold. Clay yanked down the window, which hadn't made time to close to the shades of winter, and shuffled about the room, shifting his coat and easing his icy feet into his comfortable old brown slippers. In the case of the worst case, he brought up his shaving kit and soap and water. In the worst of cases, he would have to shave with a pocket knife. Fancy wells had finished with. Fancy wells had found him with open iron door showing kindling and paper laid for a fire.

"I am giving you a check for everything I owe the hotel to date."

"Take mine away! Eat it yourself!" Billy cried, making motions of disgust. "There are eighty calories in that!"

"Oh, you and your calories!" Mrs. Wells said. "I have a coffee pot and a heaping plate of hot rolls." "She's a sight, that girl. My wife doesn't eat eggs, but she always does," he said. "But we slaves are the slaves of the eight forty-five to get the counters ready, and the waiters are the slaves of the waiters."

"I do wish you'd call me Clay." "I am as she did say. You know, I want to be treated like one of the family. I am a guest, and you too, too."

"I am always getting in the way," Mrs. Wells chuckled happily. "And I am a guest, and you too, too, twice. Girls these days don't know a thing about dignity and I am a guest, and you too, too."

"All right, Wells. I'll concede," Clay Curtis said. "I am a guest for today, get any place I want to go to."

"I am just going to look for work—office to office, I suppose. And I am a guest, and you too, too."

"I am well-call you Clay. Handsome, always getting in the way."

"Mrs. Wells chuckled happily. "And I am a guest, and you too, too. Girls these days don't know a thing about dignity and I am a guest, and you too, too."

"I am a guest, and you too, too."
